Week 9 - Xiaoyan Ma

Understanding Comic Ch4

What is it about?

Time and movement can be expressed through different spatial arrangements

By guiding the reader’s imagination, the artist can turn these static images into a continuous story or lead the reader in the direction they intend.

The space an image occupies influences the reader's perception of time.

What I Think?

Using spatial arrangement to control the rhythm of use in design

Enable users to form their own connections through the sequence of information.

Understanding Comic Ch6

What is it about?

The author challenges the idea that “text alone is more mature, while combining words and pictures is more childish.”

How words and pictures work together.

What I Think?

I don’t think text and images necessarily have to say the same thing.

we should judge each work of literature or art based on its own qualities.

Question

Do you think text  only books are more “mature” than books that combine words and pictures? I was taught that reading books with only text was a sign of maturity, and comics or books with lots of illustrations were considered immature. Why are we taught to judge books this way? How is this idea of “maturity” defined in different education systems?

Futurescaping

What is it about?

The future also carries traces of the past and the present

Everyone can also participate through drawing, model-making, and collaborative creation.

What I Think?

I don’t think the future necessarily has to look “high tech,” and I think design should be human centered.

I think making it tangible helps us understand whether we actually want that kind of future.

Question

If different people desire different futures, how should a designer decide whose future to bring into reality?

Storytelling

What the Author Intends Is Not Necessarily What the Audience Understands

Ways of Conveying Emotion

Myths and Design

Question

When interpreting a story, should audiences try to understand it from the author’s perspective, or is their own interpretation equally valid?
